五、“四5”原则

Anonymity is not something which was invented with the Internet. Anonymity（匿名）and pseudonymity（假名）has occurred throughout history. For example, William Shakespeare is probably a pseudonym, and the real name of this__1__author is not known and will probably never be known.

Anonymity has been used for many purposes. A well-known person may use a pseudonym to write messages, where the person does not want people's__2__of the real author to__3__their perception of the message. Also, other people may want to__4__certain information about themselves in order to achieve a more__5__evaluation of their messages. A case in point is that in history it has been__6__that women used male pseudonyms and for Jews to use pseudonyms in societies where their__7__was persecuted. Anonymity is often used to protect the__8__of people, for example when reporting results of a scientific study, when describing individual cases.

Many countries even have laws which protect anonymity in certain circumstances. For instance, a person may, in many countries, consult a priest, doctor or lawyer and__9__personal information which is protected. In some__10__, for example confession in catholic churches, the confession booth（告解室）is specially__11__ to allow people to consult a priest, __12__ seeing him face to face.

The anonymity in__13__situations is however not always 100%. If a person tells a lawyer that he plans a__14__crime, some countries allow or even__15__that the lawyer tell the__16__. The decision to do so is not easy, since people who tell a priest or a psychologist that they plan a crime, may often do this to__17__their feeling more than their real intention.

Many countries have laws protecting the anonymity of tip-offs to newspapers. It is regarded as__18__that people can give tips to newspapers about abuse, even though they are dependent__19__the organization they are criticizing and do not dare reveal their__20__name. Advertisement in personal sections in newspapers are almost always signed by a pseudonym for obvious reasons.
